PREFACE.

The Year-Book may now be said to have matured; it does not yet possess the full vigor of manhood, but it has all its purposes. The promises made in announcements of Dec 15 1887, and April 1, 1888, have, it is believed, been kept. The pronounced local character of the earlier volumes, which the third and fourth however, materially lessened, has been absorbed, the Boston Musical Year-Book was the corner-stone upon which the Musical Year-Book of the United States has been builded. This change has its justification in many ways; happily what is omitted from the Boston record of 1887-88 will, it is hoped, disappoint only a few of the little group of staunch supporters of the Year-Book from the beginning, while what is added to the general record is more than defensible on the ground of increased usefulness. Again, and most important broadening the scope of the book makes possible a return for the labor of preparing it which the two volumes of the original local publication did not encourage. the former would have died while the latter seems likely to live and thrive. The paragraph introducing the fourth volume of the Year-Book contained this sentence "it is my desire to make particular record of local musical beginnings and several such are recorded in these pages, but until knowledge that such a book as mine exists is more widely spread, until professional musicians and amateurs understand that I am working to furnish something of value to them, I must admit the fact that I cannot do all that I would." Within the year since the above was written there have come to me many evidences that the Year-Book was being more appreciated, discussed and circulated. The sturdy support of most of the leading choral societies has been of the greatest help to me, and I heartily acknowledge it here; there are still contumacious circles, without enterprise, not particularly impoverished, which cannot quite grasp the full privileges which the Year-Book offers them.

It would seem that the manner of classifying happenings in the larger cities introduced for the first time in this volume, together with the use of the *, indicating a first performance in any given city, the , first performance in the country, applied to more important works, and the †, new works in the larger forms, together with the carefully prepared index with titles, will meet the approval of users of the book. Authentic information is sought in preparing this annual, in all cases societies and individual concert-givers are called upon for corrected programmes. Some errors are, perhaps, unavoidable, but it is the aim of the compiler to consider accuracy first. Guarded use of the * and other symbols, heretofore mentioned, is made, and it may be that a work given for the first time, etc., is not always accompanied by the proper sign. The compiler seeks to know of himself the facts which accompany the production of novelties, rather than accept the claim of any well-meaning partisan whose methods may be less exact than his. Considering that the ground covered by the book is the whole country it may be the easier for its critics to excuse such omissions, particularly as the compiler is not a gray-beard or given to the practice of any occult science which may charm the memory into forgetting nothing. The list of new American compositions, the tables of first performances both in this country and abroad, are features which will remain permanent and will be extended.

Retrospect.

THE cities of the United States which have cultivated music longer and more wisely than others, a condition of things in part due to their original preferment, are those which this book shows to have been leaders during the past year, namely, New York, Boston and Philadelphia. Development in New York and Philadelphia, however, has not been steady, the cultivation of choral music having been a more valuable factor in the past in New York than at present, while it is the plaint of many in Philadelphia that her prestige in music has departed. Because of the variety of musical means presented and the ability to command the best interpretations, New York is most envied of cities. Permanent opera (in German) has, during four seasons, exerted the greatest single influence, particularly in defining the aims of Richard Wagner as illustrated in the works of his final period, all of which, barring "The Rhinegold" and "Parsifal," have been brought before American audiences for the first time. The stockholders of the Metropolitan Opera House by their generous subvention assume that obligation to the art of music which in wiser and more artistic countries is undertaken by the State. In the field of instrumental music, both as regards the number and the character of her concerts, New York leads, an unparalleled catholicity marking not only the programmes of her oldest conductor, who was no less a safe guide and tolerant leader when the field was only his, but being characteristic of all who counselled in this direction. Passing over the achievements of the German societies, for though in a high degree beneficial they affected a somewhat restricted class, choral music suffered. The extremes were, perhaps, covered, certainly societies which practise refined part-singing are not wanting, but the middle ground, which is best represented by the secular cantata, is left untilled. Chamber-music in New York follows elastic lines, the popular sharing generously with the classic forms, yet the record is not unworthy the commendation of those who count love for the string quartet or quintet as expressing the highest musical taste. The admirable balance which the Boston record presents will be remarked. In all important fields, save that of opera, there has been exercised a wise activity. The singing-clubs operate with a fine catholicity, and while the works resting on middle ground which they have performed do not in the aggregate count quite as notable as in past years, the fact indicates a happening not a purpose. The pioneer oratorio society of the country records a liberal stand towards schools in music. The orchestral plant in Boston is more firmly fixed and more promising than elsewhere, abundant concerts have been given, offering but a single vulnerable point for criticism — namely, the programmes. Chamber-music was never stronger. Pianoforte and song-recitals of marked value constituted an educational factor of importance. Though Philadelphia was not self-reliant in the department of instrumental music, and the fact counts against her, what constituted her complement was excellent; the design of the concerto of the local orchestra, it is said, is primarily to entertain. There is a very earnest feeling permeating the societies which practise choral music, and, perhaps, no more hopeful sign of a musical revival could be named. Toward chamber-music of the strict type the city does not incline.

Cincinnati leads among the inland cities in all that constitutes healthy growth. The College of Music is the potent single influence, laboring assiduously and well in a path of public duty and benefit. Biennial festivals have brought to the study of choral music a proper dignity; they have been conducted with a view to inculcate liberality in music, and their programmes have been taken from old and new schools judiciously; yet the impartial observer fails to find results quite commensurate with the labor expended Chicago, rich in individual attainment has not the gift of co-operation. The city is backward in finding out that there is more in music than amusement; her only permanent orchestral concerts are given in the summer season, with the powerful adjunct of cakes and wine — or, to be exact sandwiches and beer Her leading choral society works upon a progressive plan, and is an influence of great good in establishing musical taste Chamber-music has taken deep root, which is another glad factor to the mind of the sympathetic critic this seems a condition, strange indeed, in a city which cultivates the miscellaneous concert in all its sinuous wearisomeness where Audran, Genée, Jakabowski, Millocker and Strauss are throned gods. St. Louis received an impetus in the practice of choral music with the inauguration of a new Music Hall in 1885; her instrumental society reflects the spirit of modern music. Milwaukee invites attention to her enterprise in one branch which only heightens her neglect of another. Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo are cities whose musical tenure is uncertain, though the permanency of one society in Cleveland invites only modified reproof. The present year notes several hopeful agencies both in Detroit and Buffalo; chamber-music in the former shows distinct excellence, while if Buffalo were less fastidious regarding her leaders, and given more to labor for the sake of music, her undoubted capacity and true spirit towards the art would be accounted at nearer their true value; the festival chorus in Buffalo is not a permanent organization. Realizing the limits of the field it cultivates, the work of the vocal society of San Francisco is of the highest importance; its eleven years have wrought incalculable good in a community whose isolation would seem to raise a barrier against rapid progress in the arts Equally suggestive is the year's record of chamber-music in San Francisco, the eclectic and progressive character of the works performed declare the wisdom of the governing hand. Providence and Pittsburg are zealous advocates of what is best along limited lines. The first-named reached the highest place in her history with the record of the past season, while the latter allowed to lie dormant much plastic material. Brooklyn has earned honors in music for more than a generation.

Students of what has transpired in Dayton, Hartford and Newark, will not dismiss these cities without recognizing the musical seed planted there; likewise, the germ which in Atlanta, Des Moines, and particularly in Washington, is sure to bear fruit. Regarding annual festivals, that occurring in Worcester is most important. While the attitude there is conservative, and one inviting some strictures from those who hold to metropolitan standards, sure progress has been made, and a community benefited. Rutland is the seat of an encouraging enterprise. Of the more youthful meetings having a festival character, those at Petersburg and Plattsburg indicate permanency; that they are guiding wisely their susceptible following must be admitted. Particular interest accompanies the development of the more southerly of these: success there will encourage an extension of similar philanthropy into a region now almost wholly dependent upon inteneraries which, with rare exceptions, are quite devoid of an educative purpose. The record which Canada presents is wholly dignified and admirable.

Of marked influence on musical taste were the tours of the Theodore Thomas and the Boston Symphony orchestras. Of one hundred and nine performances given by the National Opera Company, it is estimated that forty-three were first representations in the cities visited, a fact which, taken in connection with the uniform excellence of the work done, has particular significance. The repertory of this organization during three years was more noteworthy than that of any of its predecessors or contemporaries organized to travel; the company staged works in a superior manner and with fidelity to the subjects chosen; its policy of furnishing an evenly good corps of leading artists, a chorus which sang expressively, and a fine orchestra, dealt an emphatic blow to the star system, and indirectly to Italian opera.

No sign of the times is of greater moment than the activity of American composers. The list of compositions which appears upon pages 101 and 102 must gratify everyone who looks for serious work among native writers. No year in the musical history of the United States has been as prolific of good composition or more encouraging to those who seek substance and worth in results than that which this book celebrates. The helpful attitude of Mr. Van der Stucken in New York, of the Music Teachers' National Association, of the leading conductors and societies, especially singing-clubs of the country, towards the native composer, has established the needed incentive to compose; it only remains for societies to emulate the example of the Cincinnati Festival management and offer a fair compensation for the brain-work they are enlisted to honor.

PREFACE.

THIS, the sixth volume of the Year-Book, presents the same general features as the fifth. The record by cities is alphabetical, the happenings in the larger ones being classified. It is believed that the greater scope given the paragraphs and tables of general information will increase the usefulness of the book, whose various departments are given in the Table of Contents. The Year-Book purports to present a record of music publicly performed in the country which is compatible with a high standard. While the private character of the book justifies considerable elasticity in presenting details more interesting to localities than important to the country at large, the editor considers it an obligation to omit nothing occurring between the seas that has present value or future promise to the loveliest of the arts. As the editor seeks to make an authentic record, the corrected programmes of societies and individual concert-givers are in all cases the authority. The * used throughout these pages indicates a first performance in any given city; the , first performance in the country, applied to more important works; the †, new works in the larger forms. To seize upon and locate all first performances is so vexing a matter that the absence of the * in connection with newer names and titles should not be considered conclusive; rather let its presence be taken as an indication than as establishing a limit. Works written for voices and orchestra are understood to have been performed in their integrity unless a substitute for orchestra is named.

G. H. WILSON.

PREFACE.

The Year-Book purports to present a record of music publicly performed which is compatible with a high standard. If this volume fails to note any happening in music during the season now ended, significant in its local or general aspect, it is because authentic information was lacking. I try to ascertain the facts regarding every movement in music in the country; the indifference of some has prevented the fullest success, although each year there are fewer failures to answer my inquiries. Less important details of the concerts of societies working along similar lines appear in some cases and not in others, for the reason that local subscriptions to the book make it prudent for me to insert them. The private character of the enterprise justifies this mutual attitude. I take this opportunity to thank those societies who annually send me a subscription; without their co-operation the scope of my book would be much reduced: my undertaking is in no sense philanthropic; the Year-Book lives on what it earns.

The usual features are retained in this the seventh annual volume, but in several departments the book is more complete than any in the series. Among the new tables introduced is one which can be made of service to societies interested in the native composer.

The * used throughout these pages indicates a first performance in any given city; the , first performance in the country, applied to more important works; the †, new works in the larger forms. To seize upon and locate all first performances is so difficult a matter that the absence of signs in connection with newer names and titles should not be considered conclusive; rather let their presence be taken as an indication than as establishing a limit. Works written for voices and orchestra are understood to have been performed in their integrity, unless a substitute for orchestra is named.

G. H. WILSON.
